

Burning Issues...

A familiar site in inner Clackamas County...

CCCFFA members living within a few miles of a town or city have endured another year of accumulating debris on our lands since burning is no longer an option. Unfortunately, landowners are often not aware of the ban until they have a site like THIS and go to apply for a permit to burn. Options to treating slash by burning are very few and very costly.

Ironic, isn't it...?

We were once known as 'stump farmers' due to the old "cut and run" industrial practices. Perhaps now we'll gain notoriety as 'slash pile farmers'. CCFFA's efforts have been to provide the fire districts and other agencies a better understanding of woodland owners needs as related to slash burning. CCFFA's Slash Burning Work

Group is still interested in your questions, concerns, experiences with fire districts, etc. that are related to the burning of woodland waste. Talk to a board member or contact us via www.ccffa-oswa.org. ■
